In the Supreme Court of Georgia

Decided: APR 6 1982

38247. SMITH v. THE STATE

WELTNER, Justice.

The defendant was convicted of armed robbery and murder of 82 year-old Daniel Turner. The jury returned a finding that the murder was outrageously and wantonly vile, horrible and inhuman in that the murder involved torture, depravity of mind and aggravated battery to the victim, and recommended that the defendant be sentenced to death. The trial court then sentenced the defendant to death for murder, and life imprisonment for the armed robbery.

1. In his first enumeration of error Smith contends that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence two black-and-white photographs of the victim. The two photographs showing the numerous stab wounds and head injuries received by the victim, one frontal and one rear view, cannot be said to be repetitious and cumulative. The state complied with our suggestion in Florence v. State, 243 Ga. 738, 741 (fn. 1) (256 SE2d 467) (1979). The photographs were relevant in that they depicted the location and nature of the wounds received by the victim and corroborated the confession of the defendant. Davis v. State, 242 Ga. 901 (252 SE2d 443) (1979); Brooks v. State, 244 Ga. 574 (261 SE2d 379) (1979); Cobb v. State, 244 Ga. 344 (260 SE2d 60) (1979); Franklin v. State, 245 Ga. 141 (263 SE2d 666) (1980); Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868 (268 SE2d 316) (1980); Dick v. State, 246 Ga. 697 (273 SE2d 124) (1980). We find no merit in this enumeration of error.

Smith further complains that by admitting the photographs, the jury was given the opportunity to make a decision as to the cause of death. The defendant overlooks the fact that this is the ultimate fact facing the jury in any murder trial -- death at the hand of the defendant.

2. In his second and third enumerations of error, Smith contends that the trial court erred in not defining the term "mitigating" and in not specifying the mitigating circumstances offered by him.

In Potts v. State, 241 Ga. 67, 86 (16) (243 SE2d 510) (1978), this court held: "Under Georgia law, mitigating circumstances are not required to be singled out in the charge. Thomas v. State, 240 Ga. 393, 401 (242 SE2d 1) (1977)"; and in Collier v. State, 244 Ga. 553, 568-9 (12) (261 SE2d 364) (1979), the court held: "The trial court charged that the jury was to 'consider all the evidence submitted in both phases of the trial in arriving at your verdict, including any and all evidence of mitigating circumstances.' It is not required that specific mitigating circumstances be singled out by the court in giving its instructions to the jury. [citations omitted] To influence the jury by use of examples may limit their discretion to consider other matters in addition to the examples given. A charge such as the one requested may influence the jury either to weigh mitigation against aggravation or to limit their consideration to whether mitigating circumstances exist. Under our statute the jury may recommend a life sentence even though no mitigating circumstances are found." Accord Stevens v. State, 247 Ga. 698 (18) (278 SE2d 388) (1981).

The charge concerning mitigation was not improper, nor was it subject to the deficiencies discussed in Spivey v. Zant, 661 F2d 464 (5th Cir. 1981). The triers of fact were not limited in what they might consider in mitigation. Eddings v. Oklahoma, ____US____, 30 CLR 3047, Case No. 80-5727, decided January 19, 1982. Mitigation being a word of common meaning and understanding, it is not error to fail to define it. Cape v. State, 246 Ga. 520 (272 SE2d 487) (1980).

3. Smith's fifth enumeration of error asserts that the trial court erred in instructing the jury to disregard an emotional outcry by Smith's mother during the sentencing phase of the trial.

The transcript reflects the following events during examination of Smith's mother by his counsel:

"MRS. SMITH: I'm begging y'all. Please don't take him away from me. (Witness crying). Punish him, yes, but don't kill him.

"MR. KEEBLE: Miss Mary, please compose yourself. All right? Just answer [the District Attorney's] questions."

The District Attorney then cross-examined Mrs. Smith, asking but seven questions, whereupon the witness was dismissed, and another witness was called on behalf of Smith. It was at this point that the court stated to the jury: "Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I believe this is a serious matter, but I will ask you to please disregard the emotional outbreak. It has no part in this trial. We're here to decide this matter -- you are -- from the evidence and the law, and you decide it from that."

No objection was made to this instruction and we cannot say that the trial court abused its discretion in so instructing the jury. Messer v. State, 247 Ga. 316, 324 (6) (276 SE2d 15) (1981), and cases cited. It is apparent that the trial judge's ruling was not an impermissible comment on the evidence. See High v. State, 247 Ga. 289 (276 SE2d 5) (1981).

4. In his sixth and seventh enumerations, Smith contends that both the death penalty statute and the Georgia Unified Appeal procedures are unconstitutional, both as constituted, and as applied in this case. "This court and the Supreme Court of the United States have upheld the constitutionality of the Georgia death penalty statute in a number of cases, and the appellant has advanced no new reason for us to reconsider our position. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153 (96 SC 2909, 49 LE2d 859) (1976); Legare v. State, 243 Ga. 744 (257 SE2d 247) (1979)." Stevens v. State, supra at 707.

Smith avers that the statutes have been applied in fact in an arbitrary and capricious manner. He points to no facts which support this conclusion. The same attack has been raised before and decided adversely to Smith's position.

McCorquodale v. Balkcom, 525 F.Supp. 408, 525 F.Supp. 431 (N.D. Ga. 1981).

This court has also upheld the constitutionality of the Unified Appeal procedure in Sliger v. State, 248 Ga. 316 (282 SE2d 291) (1981), cert. denied, _____US_____(decided February 22, 1982). Certainly, to determine at a state in the proceeding when a remedy might be provided whether a client is satisfied with his attorney's handling of his case is not invading the attorney-client relationship, as urged upon us by Smith. Neither does that determination call into question the "judgment of the accused's counsel." Similar procedures are used to determine competency of counsel when guilty pleas are tendered, Fair v. State, 245 Ga. 868 (268 SE2d 316) (1980); and, it cannot seriously be argued that these procedures, which are designed to protect the rights of a defendant, violate the Fifth, Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

We have studied the entire record of this case, and turn now to two matters which are not addressed in the enumeration of error.

The trial court charged on insanity as follows: "Thus, if you find the defendant did not have reasonable sufficiency to distinguish between right and wrong because of mental disease, injury or congenital deficiency, and [emphasis supplied] that he acted as he did because of delusional compulsion, as I have instructed you, at the time the commission of such alleged offense, that would be an end of your consideration of this case and you would stop at that point and enter a verdict that would reflect your findings. And the form of that verdict would be, 'We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty by reason of insanity.'"

It is possible that the use of the conjunction "and" might be understood by the jury to imply that a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity would require both an inability to distinguish right and wrong and delusional compulsion.

We have reviewed the record in this case relative to any evidence of insanity which could support a finding of not guilty by reason of insanity. The most the evidence shows is that Smith had a low IQ, possibly equivalent to that of an eleven year-old child. There is a vast difference between low intelligence and an inability to distinguish between right and wrong. Indeed, the psychiatric testimony in the case indicates that 10% of the population has an intelligence level not greater than Smith's.

In final argument, Smith's counsel addressed the question of insanity as follows: "And [the judge] will charge you, I would expect, that you are to consider in your deliberations, taking your experience into that jury room, that you are to consider the absolute senselessness of the act. I will say to you the absolutely bizarre, totally senseless taking of Mr. Dan's life. You can consider that, ladies and gentlemen, in your deliberation. And, in that event, you would be authorized, if you so found, that because of the very nature of the act and the other evidence that has been presented to you, and I submit to you his IQ level, that he was insane at the time he did it. He just went beserk. No planning was involved in this thing. Certainly there's no logic to it, any way you can look at it. So I submit to you, ladies and gentlemen, that we're talking about a ten or eleven year-old child...." There being no evidence, and no suggestion by counsel, of an inability to distinguish between right and wrong or of acts which were the consequence of an insane delusion, any want of precision in the charge relative to these two principles is at most harmless error. Lively v. State, 178 Ga. 693 (12) (173 SE 836) (1934); Reece v. State, 212 Ga. 609 (94 SE2d 723) (1956); Woods v. State, 214 Ga. 546 (105 SE2d 896) (1958).

We note, also, that the court submitted to the jury a prepared verdict in the form as follows:

"VERDICT

COUNT I: 'We, the jury, find the defendant (guilty-not guilty) of murder.'

COUNT II: 'We, the jury, find the defendant (guilty-not guilty) of armed robbery.'"

After the charge, defense counsel remarked that the form did not contain a place for a finding of not guilty by reason of insanity. There was, however, no objection. The court inquired of the defense counsel "Do you think that's all right?" He responded, "Yes, sir."

The failure of the court to submit a form including all of the possible forms of the verdict was not harmful, in view of our holding as to the issue of insanity in this case.

If prepared forms for verdicts are to be submitted to juries, it is obviously preferable that the submission contain a form for each verdict which might be permissible in the case. Because court-submitted documents are still rare in our practice, particular attention should be given, lest the jury draw an inference, however unfounded, of predisposition on the part of the trial judge. Here, as example, the form contains in parenthesis the words "guilty-not guilty." While there is no such evidence in this case, some other jury might perceive the antecedence of the word "guilty" over the words "not guilty" to be expressive of the view of the court. It would be safer were the words guilty and "not guilty" omitted entirely from the form, to be completed by the hand of the jury.

SENTENCE REVIEW

As required by Ga. L. 1973, p. 159, et. seq., [Code Ann. §27-2537 (c) (1-3)], we have reviewed the death sentence in this case. We have considered the aggravating circumstances found by the jury, and the evidence concerning the crime and the defendant.

As provided for by the Unified Appeal procedure, we have reviewed independently the record and transcript and find no significant potential of error other than those enumerated by the appellant.

5. Appellant argues that the sentence of death was imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice and other arbitrary factors, because the jury was inflamed by the death of an 82 year-old white man by a 21 year-old black man, together with gory photographs. We do not agree. Two photographs were not cumulative nor unnecessarily gruesome considering the scenes which they depicted. They are plainly admissible. Division 1, supra. The record is bare of any indication that the jury abdicated its oath for passion or prejudice. The appellant further asserts the "Private Slovik syndrome" for the first time on appeal. This argument is without merit. House v. Stynchcombe, 239 Ga. 222 (236 SE2d 353) (1977); Cape v. State, 246 Ga. 520 (272 SE2d 487) (1980). We find that the sentence of death was not imposed under the influence of passion, prejudice or any other arbitrary factor.

6. The jury found the following statutory aggravating circumstances justifying the death sentence: "The repeated stabbings along with two blows in the head justifies aggravating circumstances. Also the fact he was first stabbed in the back. Also the fact that he received the blows to his head after he was lying on the floor suffering from the stab wounds. For the said offense of murder was outrageously and wantonly vile, horrible and inhumane, in that the murder involved torture, depravity of mind and aggravated battery to the victim."

The State presented evidence that on June 8, 1981, Smith walked to Turner's grocery store in Lexington, Georgia. Smith had known Turner, whom he referred to as "Mr. Dan," as long as he could remember, and Turner had always been good to him. When he arrived at the store, Turner was asleep but awoke to wait on him. He asked for a pack of cigarettes and observed that Turner was alone. When Turner reached around for the cigarettes, Smith grabbed him, and Turner resisted. Smith pulled a knife out of his back pocket and repeatedly stabbed Turner until Turner dropped a hammer he had picked up. Smith grabbed the hammer and hit Turner with it twice in the head. At that time Smith saw that Willie Robinson had come to the door. The appellant went to the door and told Willie Robinson, "Damn, I have killed Mr. Dan." He instructed Willie Robinson not to tell anyone. Smith thereafter went back in the store from the front door and took money from the cash register and Turner's wallet. He was observed running from the store. While he was running, he wrapped his shirt around his bleeding hand and the hammer. As he ran, he threw the hammer and the shirt on the side of the road. Eventually he threw Turner's wallet away.

Smith was captured by authorities on the night of the murder and the wallet, hammer, shirt, and $237.00 were recovered. Smith confessed to the crime and stated: "The reason for my actions, I was trying to get money for another car."

Shortly after the crime, a local veterinarian discovered Turner in his store under a large empty aluminum trash barrel, and several large cardboard boxes and other pieces of trash. Across the top of his head was a deep gash. He was lying unconscious in a pool of blood. His glasses had been knocked crooked; his false teeth plate was across his mouth. A broken knife blade was found in the fold of his shirt. Turner had been stabbed once below the corner of the right eye, four times in the upper right side of the chest, and twelve times in the back. He also had been struck in the head with a blunt instrument and a medical expert testified that these wounds could have resulted from the blows of a hammer. The 82 year-old victim died the next day from blunt force trauma to his head.

The sentence of death in this case rests upon the aggravating circumstances set forth in Code Ann. § 27-2534.1 (b) (7): "The offense of murder, rape, armed robbery, or kidnapping was outrageously or wantonly vile, horrible or inhuman in that it involved torture, depravity of mind, or an aggravated battery to the victim." We review the sentence in light of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Godfrey v. Georgia, 446 U.S. 420 (100 SC 1759, 64 LE2d 398) (1980), as construed by this court in Hance v. State, 245 Ga. 856, 861 (268 SE2d 339) (1980), as follows: "Torture occurs when the victim is subjected to serious physical abuse before death." The victim in this case was not killed instantaneously, but was stabbed a total of 17 times and then beaten about the head with a hammer. The victim lived almost a full day after the crime.

A defendant who tortures his victim may be found to have a depraved mind; and the age and physical characteristics of the victim may be considered in determining depravity of mind. Hance v. State, supra at 862.

This was not a "domestic" murder. The victim gave Smith no reason to assault him, and was in no manner threatening. Rather, Smith had known the victim for as long as he could remember, and the victim had been "good to him." Smith fled and attempted to hide his crime. See Godfrey v. Georgia, supra. The sole motive for the murder was the armed robbery of the victim to obtain money to purchase another car.

The evidence substantiates and supports the findings of the statutory aggravating circumstances, and the sentence of death. Under the facts of this case, we find that the murder was the type universally condemned by civilized society as wantonly vile, horrible, and inhumane as it involved torture to the victim as set forth above.

7. We have reviewed the instruction of the trial court during the sentencing phase of the trial and find that the charge was not subject to the defects dealt with in Fleming v. State, 240 Ga. 142 (240 SE2d 37) (1977), and Hawes v. State, 240 Ga. 327 (240 SE2d 833) (1977). In reviewing the death penalty, we have considered the cases appealed to this court since January 1, 1970 in which a death or life sentence was imposed and have listed in the appendix twenty-three similar cases imposing the death penalty.

This was a cold-blooded killing of an elderly man, committed in the course of an armed robbery, with the sole motive being financial gain. The cases in the appendix involve the unprovoked killing of an unarmed victim or victims during an armed robbery, and, therefore, illustrate a jury's willingness to impose a death sentence under these circumstances. Smith's sentence to death for murder is not excessive or disproportionate to the penalty imposed in similar cases considering both the crime and the defendant.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

EXAMINATION

BY THE COURT:

Q Mr. Ray, the Court would like to ask you a question, please, sir.

A All right.

Q Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?

A I don't guess so.

Q In other words, you would listen to the evidence in the case and the charge of the Court and go by that, even if it included a possibility of capital punishment?

A Yeah.

THE COURT: What do you say, gentlemen?

MR. KEEBLE: Yes, sir.

MR. MILLER: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Thank you, Mr. Ray. You may go. John W. Monk.

SHERIFF: Mr. Monk.

THE COURT: Hey, Mr. Monk. Have a seat right here, please, sir. Did you get some lunch?

JUROR: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Good.

EXAMINATION

BY THE COURT:

Q Mr. Monk, the Court wanted to ask you a question, a voir dire question, concerning your possibly being a prospective juror in this case. Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?

A I've got mixed emotions about it. I've always said that I was opposed to it, but I'm beginning to change my mind. But I haven't come to a complete satisfaction about it.

Q Let me ask you this question, Mr. Monk. Could you listen to the evidence in the case and then listen to the Court tell you what the law is, and would you go by that and go by the law that the Court gives you even if it included capital punishment?

A I wouldn't have any trouble really with a verdict of guilty, but I don't know whether I could vote to send a man to the electric chair or not.

Q Even if the Court included that in its charge, you wouldn't go by what the Court said, and you'd do something else? You'd obey the law, wouldn't you?

A I try to to the best of my ability, but I've got to stick to what I believe in, too. And I just don't know whether I could or not.

Q Well, I don't want to press you on it too hard, but I do have to have an answer yes or no, if that's possible. If you can't, of course, then you can't give me a yes or no.

A Well, right now, the way I feel, if I came to that position, I just don't feel like I could honestly.

Q So, in other words --

A With my religious belief.

Q In other words, under no circumstances would you vote for the death penalty? There's no circumstances that you could think of that you would vote for the death penalty, if the case got to that point?

A Not right at this time, no, sir.

Q So, the Court can assume, then, that the answer to my question to you is yes, that you are conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?

A Right.

THE COURT: What do you say, Mr. Keeble.

MR. KEEBLE: One question.

THE COURT: Sure.

MR. KEEBLE: Sir, Mr. Monk, there's no possible situation, no matter how horrible and vile the crime may be, that you could consider the death penalty?

A I don't think that has anything to do with it as far as I'm concerned. My problem is with my religious beliefs and what the Lord tells me to do.

MR. KEEBLE: I can respect that.

A And I have done a lot of research lately. I have come to the point that I feel like we've got to do something in our courts -- and I don't mean to make a speech here, but I do want to state my position. And I have...am leaning that direction, that we've got to do something. We've got to make it stiffer on crime. But --

MR. KEEBLE: In response to my question that the crime could be so horrible and vile? You don't think you could impose it under any of those type situations?

A Not right now, until I search this thing out. And I have honestly, before this came up, been doing some research on it, and I have not come to the point that I feel like I could do it.

THE COURT: Mr. Miller, do you have any questions of Mr. Monk.

Q (The Court) Mr. Monk, the Court then assumes, from your answers to my questions and Mr. Keeble's questions, in this case or any other case, there's no circumstances under which you would ever vote for the death penalty at this time?

A At this particular time, I would not.

Q So the answer to my question, "Are you conscientiously opposed to capital punishment?" at this time, is yes?

A Yes.

THE COURT: Thank you, sir. You may go. What do you think, gentlemen?

MR. MILLER: I think the juror should be stricken.

MR. KEEBLE: Your Honor, I realize under Witherspoon that he's qualified but, for the record, I would take exception.

THE COURT: Now, wait a minute. Say that again.

MR. KEEBLE: I realize, under Witherspoon, that he he would not be qualified and that, under Witherspoon, the Court has a right to excuse him.

THE COURT: The Court has got a duty to excuse him.

MR. KEEBLE: Yes, sir, under the law.

THE COURT: That's right. That's what I'm here to do, is uphold the law.

MR. KEEBLE: Exactly. But, Your Honor, we feel that constitutionally the defendant is still entitled to representative jurors of a cross section of society.

THE COURT: In other words, you're asking this Court to disregard Witherspoon, which is a decision of the United States Supreme Court...to disregard that decision and rule with you in this matter? Is that what you're asking the Court to do, Mr. Keeble?

MR. KEEBLE: Yes, sir.

THE COURT: Overrule. He's excused.

SHERIFF: Who do you want next?

CLERK: Mrs. Daryl Johnson.

THE COURT: Mrs. Daryl Johnson.

SHERIFF: Mrs. Daryl Johnson.

THE COURT: How are you doing, Mrs. Johnson?

EXAMINATION

BY THE COURT:

Q Mrs. Johnson, the Court wanted to ask you a question, please, ma'am, concerning your being a prospective juror in this

CHARGE OF THE COURT

AS TO SENTENCE

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, it is my duty, as presiding Judge in this case, to instruct you now as to the law governing the sentencing phase of this case. The instruction given you earlier by The Court and the rule of law outlined to you in this portion of the instructions apply also to your deliberations as to the penalty. Let me go over that with you again in case you didn't catch it. The charge and instructions that I gave you earlier on the guilt or innocence phase of the trial will apply and rules of law applying to you then will also apply as a portion of the instruction, and also for your deliberations during the penalty phase of this trial.

I charge you, ladies and gentlemen of the jury that the law of Georgia provides that the death penalty may be imposed in certain cases provided the jury finds beyond a reasonable doubt that the offense for which the accused was convicted was committed under what the law described as statutory aggravating circumstances. In this case, the State contends that the offense of murder for which the accused has been convicted was committed under one of these aggravating circumstances, and that aggravating circumstance contended is: For the said offense of murder was outrageously and wantonly vile, horrible, and inhumane in that the murder involved torture, depravity of mind, and aggravated battery to the victim. Such a circumstance is defined as a statutory aggravating circumstance under the law of this state.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, you have found the defendant guilty of the offense of murder, and you may recommend one of two sentences to The Court as punishment. If you believe beyond a reasonable doubt that the offense was committed under the aggravating circumstance, as contended by the State, if you do so find, you may recommend that this defendant be put to death by adding to your verdict, "We recommend death and find the following statutory aggravating circumstance beyond a reasonable doubt." And you must set forth in writing the aggravating circumstance which you find to exist. If you do add that recommendation, the accused will be sentenced to be put to death in the manner provided by law, which in this state is electrocution.

The other punishment which you may recommend back to The Court in this case is life imprisonment. If you do not believe beyond a reasonable doubt that this defendant should be put to death, you may leave your verdict as it is. That is, that you find the defendant guilty, and the effect of this sentence would be that The Court would sentence the accused to life in prison.

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, you should consider all of the evidence, both the evidence submitted during the sentence phase, as well as the evidence submitted at the prior phase of this trial, in arriving at your verdict as to the sentence to be imposed. This includes any evidence of mitigating circumstances received by you in this case.

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, even if you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the state has proved the existence of aggravating circumstances in this case which would justify under the law the imposition of a death sentence, you are not required to recommend that the accused be put to death. You would be authorized under these circumstances to recommend the death penalty, but you are not required to do so. The sentence to be imposed in this case is a matter entirely within your discretion and you may provide for a life sentence for this accused for any reason that is satisfactory to you or without any reason if you care to do so. The law vests the exclusive right with the jury to either make or withhold a recommendation for the death penalty.

Of course, if the state has failed to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the offense was committed under the aggravating circumstances described to you, you are not authorized to recommend the death penalty. Without such a finding, the death penalty cannot be imposed. In that event, you would leave your verdict as it is, and the effect of that would be that The Court would sentence the defendant to life in prison.

The law requires me to give to you , the jury, certain instructions in writing and that the jury, if its verdict be a recommendation of death, shall designate in writing the aggravated circumstance or circumstances which it finds to exist beyond a reasonable doubt.

I will furnish you a written copy of this portion of the Charge which includes the contended for aggravated circumstance in this case. And I charge you that in the event you recommend death as a penalty in this case, you should write out the recommendation and your finding as to any statutory aggravated circumstance in the form which I have given you in these instructions.

Now, ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I charge you that the form of your verdict would be, if you determine that the penalty would be life in prison, would be, "We, the jury, recommend and fix the defendant's punishment as life in prison." On the other hand, if you determine that you would recommend the death penalty, the form of your verdict would be, "We, the jury, recommend and fix the defendant's punishment as follows: Death." If death is recommended and fixed as punishment, complete the following "We further find the following aggravated circumstance," and you simply write that in on the bottom of this form.

The contended for aggravated circumstance, as I've said, is attached to these written instructions which I will send out with you.

With these instructions and to remind you again that you consider all of the evidence presented during the guilt or innocence phase of this trial, and you consider all of the evidence presented during the penalty phase of the trial, and you consider all of the law that I gave you in charge previously as well as this charge in connection with the penalty phase of the proceedings.

With these instructions, now I will ask you, ladies and gentlemen to retire to your jury room and to begin your deliberations after I send the other evidence to you. You may go.
